Lemhi County is located in central Idaho, bordering Montana along the Continental Divide. It ranks 31st among Idaho counties in population and 4th in area. The federal government owns nearly 91 percent of the county. Government employment, especially by federal land agencies, has a large effect on the local economy. Cattle ranching and tourism are significant industries in the county, and to a lesser extent, so are mining and forest products manufacturing. Annual average total employment in the county decreased by 1.9 percent from 1996 to 2006. Major employers include Steele Memorial Hospital, Saveway Market, Discovery Care Center, Q B Corporation, Idaho Department of Fish & Game, Salmon Public Schools, U.S. Government and Lemhi County government.

The city of Salmon serves as the whitewater recreation capital of the world. Rafters and kayakers launch trips here on the famous "River of No Return" Salmon River. Sacagawea, a Native American woman from the Lemhi Shoshone Tribe, was born near Tendoyard. She was an interpreter for the Lewis and Clark Expedition from 1805-1806.
